USA Today

"Other Jobs Yield Top Teachers"

Evidence from the few states aggressively recruiting outside professionals suggests that the programs can solve the twin challenges of finding more and better teachers.

The New York Times (free registration required)

"Seeking to Clone Schools of Success for Poor"

An unprecedented effort to turn a boutique school success story into a national network.

The New York Times

"Kansas Educators Turn to the Web to Create a Unique 'Virtual' School"

In one Kansas school district, educators are using the Internet to reach out to families that might otherwise turn their backs on public education.

The Washington Times

Editorial: "Getting Ready for School"

New governance changes in D.C. schools prohibit the elected board from meddling in the day-to-day affairs of the school system and from dictating which principals and teachers are assigned to which schools.
